Slavs

The Slavs were one of the most widely persecuted groups during the war, with many Poles, Belarusians, Russians, Ukrainians, Slovenes, Serbs and others killed by the Nazis. According to Bohdan Wytwycky, an estimated 3 million Ukrainians and 1.5 million Belarusians were killed by the Nazis for racially-motivated reasons.^[23] The Nazis' genocide and brutality was their way of ensuring Lebensraum ("living space") for those who met Hitler's narrow racial requirements; this necessitated the elimination of Bolsheviks and Slavs:

The Nazi revolution was broader than just the Holocaust. Its second goal was to eliminate Slavs from Central and Eastern Europe and to create a Lebensraum for Aryans ... As Bartov (The Eastern Front; Hitler's Army) shows, it barbarised the German armies on the eastern front. Most of their three million men, from generals to ordinary soldiers, helped exterminate captured Slav soldiers and civilians. This was sometimes cold and deliberate murder of individuals (as with Jews), sometimes generalised brutality and neglect ... German soldiers' letters and memoirs reveal their terrible reasoning: Slavs were 'the Asiatic-Bolshevik' horde, an inferior but threatening race.^[24]

Grandfather

Constantine Dobrowolski Ukrainian Nazi Collaborator

Agent 30
Butcher

Participated actively in the extermination of Jews.
Organised a 300-strong Ukrainian police unit which assisted in rounding up and killing Jews and Ukrainian people.
He rose to become a local intelligence chief for the Nazis in Chernigov, having first collaborated with the Hiwi, before joining the Wehrmacht's secret military police Geheime Feldpolizei in July 1942.
Shared loot taken from Holocaust victims and condoning the rape of women prisoners.

Grand Father

Michael Chomiak (born Mykhailo Khomiak)
Editor in Chief – Nazi publisher.

Grandfather of Canadian Foreign Minister Chrystia Freeland and served as the editor-in-chief of Krakivs'ki Visti, a Ukrainian-language newspaper published in Nazi-occupied Kraków from 1941 to 1945.

Archival records and historical analysis confirm that Chomiak was a Nazi collaborator who produced propaganda aligning with the regime's ideology, including anti-Semitic content that historians argue contributed to the Holocaust in Eastern Galicia. While Chomiak and his defenders claimed he was coerced or working as a double-agent for Ukrainian resistance, evidence shows he voluntarily held the position, socialized with Nazi officials, and defended the publication's anti-Jewish editorials.

Following World War II, Chomiak emigrated to Canada, where he lived as a farmer and later edited a Ukrainian Catholic weekly in Edmonton until his death in 1984. He was never prosecuted for war crimes, though Polish authorities had investigated him in the 1960s before losing track of his whereabouts in Canada.

Grandfather

Josef Paul Sauvigny
(Nazi Party in 1937)

In 2004, Merz gave a speech to local constituents criticising the "red" (Social Democratic) mayor of his hometown, Brilon, and called for the "red town hall" to be stormed. He noted that his grandfather, Josef Paul Sauvigny, had been mayor of Brilon. This statement drew criticism, for Sauvigny had been a mayor under Nazi rule.

While it is not known whether he was a formal member of the Nazi Party at the time (though he joined later), Sauvigny remained mayor after the Nazis seized power and repressed their political opponents. During his tenure, he praised the Nazi "national revolution" and renamed streets in his town after Adolf Hitler and Hermann Göring.
